Commentary

The increase in geo-political risks in South Korea and the uncertainty before the 1st round of France election held investors hostage. The Yen hit a new high for the year during the month due to its safe heaven status. The US is clearly pushing for a more aggressive stance towards North Korea. The positive meeting between US President Trump and his Chinese counterpart Xi Jinping reduced the risks of a trade war and helped to bring China on board to support global sanctions against North Korea. Still, Geo-political risks remain high in the area as the confrontation with Kim Jong Un is now pushed to a level not seen for years. This is certainly overshadowing better economic data in the region. Data in Japan continues to support further expansion as the Jobless rate hit a new low of 2.8%, PMI sentiment remains high and national CPI level is in positive territory. China surprised as well on the upside with higher 1Q GDP, PMI index in expansionary levels and exports and retail sales above forecast. The better global outlook is as well supported by stronger export data across the region, including Taiwan and South Korea. The risk adverse sentiment favored defensive sectors, while industrials, financials and material sectors were underperforming. The performance for the month of April was -1.44%, bringing its year to date result to +3.00%. The fund suffered from fast Euro appreciation after the announcement of the 1st round in the French election. The risk adverse sentiment in Asia was furthermore negative for our exposure in the cyclical segments. The only monthly positive geographic contribution in Euro came from Indonesia, while all other countries closed lower due to the 3.6% rise in the Euro against the Asian currencies. The sector allocation was positive in Health Care and Financials and Real Estate, while Consumer, Materials and Energy closed down. We continue to see regional valuations as attractive and supported by expanding economic activity. The Yen risk remains mostly hedged as our long-term view is negative on the currency.
