Commentary

Global equity market started 2018 on a strong note, but market volatility increased due to further upside pressure on global interest rates. The World Bank raised its outlook for 2018 to 3.1% from 2.9% due to a stronger expansion in the Emerging Markets. The regional economic sentiment remains expansive and geo-political risks were lower with North Korea willing to open a dialogue with South Korea. We expect equity market volatility to increase on the back of rising global yields. Still, the strong economic growth should allow companies to compensate higher financing costs with better sales/margins. Volatility could further arrive from currency markets as the US Government is talking the Greenback lower and uncertainty exists on possible shortfalls in the US Deficit. Asian valuations continue to trail the US and Europe, while regional growth is clearly more robust. The institutional class of the fund closed the first month of the year with an increase of 2.77%, the Retail class + 2.70%. The strength of the Euro was the main cause of the fund's underperformance of 1.67%, respectively 1.74% against its MSCI Far East Benchmark. The result was supported by strong performances in Japan, China and Indonesia, while our exposure in South Korea was hurt from profit taking in the technology segment. Oil & Gas, Resource, Financials and Industrial sectors reflected the general view among investors of further economic expansion in 2018. We are looking to increase exposure towards ASEAN if the rally in commodity prices is strengthening further.
